

ABSTRACT

An order management system for complex combinations of custom fabricated goods includes a transaction facility for processing orders and a remote facility associated with a fabrication site. A base computer at the transaction facility is programmed for interactive generation of orders while permitting only non-conflicting combinations of options, elements, and details of the goods, which can be windows and window accessories for buildings. Also disclosed is a method for interactively generating custom product orders.